- The legal basis for the stop and check
- Is there adequate information for the officer to conduct an investigative detention?
- Is there adequate probable cause for an arrest? If so, what are the facts constituting probable cause?

A call is received from a homeowner reporting a suspicious vehicle. According to the owner, she came home from work around 7 pm. A car was parked in her driveway that she had never seen before. As she walked up to her front door she saw a male Hispanic driver in the car, engine running and another Hispanic male, 5'7", slim build with a goatee standing at her front door. When the man saw her, he stepped back from the door and asked if "Midget" was home. She told him there was no one by that name living there. The man was nervous, apologized and went back to the car, got in and it drove away. She noticed her door lock broken. The car was described as a dark green 4 door sedan with New Mexico plates on it. The windows were tinted. A report was taken for "Criminal Attempt Burglary" and the woman said she would prosecute.

It is now 11:30 pm and the graveyard shift is on. A unit is driving past the carwash. The coin operated mechanisms have been burglarized three times that week. The business closed at 10 pm. The officer notices a car parked in the wash rack and a man is outside the car near the coin machine. The officer pulls in and blocks the car, approaching the man after calling for back-up. The officer has the driver get out of the car and the other man walked in front of the car. The description matches that of the earlier call involving an attempted burglary.

The officer separates the two after noticing several bandanas in the front seat, each filled with jewelry, watches, and loose change. One man says the items belong to him. The other man reports the items belong to his mother. The two men are brothers and give the same address in New Mexico.

Comprehensive Scenario: Racial profiling

In the following scenario, the student will identify:

- The purpose of the stop?
- Was this a lawful detention?
- Did the officer have a right to conduct a search of the backpack? Why or why not?
- Was the officer engaged in racial profiling?
- If this was racial profiling, what repercussions could the officer face?

It's 10:00 a.m. on a Saturday morning and James, an African American teenager, is walking down the sidewalk in a predominantly Caucasian residential neighborhood. There are families out playing with their children and walking their dogs. Officer Jones observes James, stops him, and demands an explanation as to what he is up to. James relates to the officer that he walking to his friend's house to work on a science project for school. James then asks the officer why he was stopped and starts to walk away. The officer appearing agitated forcibly blocks James's path and removes the backpack he is wearing and searches it. The officer discovers that it contains science books and manuals. The officer then tells James, "There's been a number of burglaries in the area. Now, get out of here before I arrest you." James left immediately and later told his parents of the incident. The officer completed his log and sheet and justified the stop as a "suspicious subject."

The car spun several times then rolled over, throwing the driver out of the vehicle. They landed off the roadway. The car's final resting position was on the roadway. Investigation reveals the body landed on federal military reservation. The car's skid marks began inside the city limits, but its final resting point is outside the city limits in the county. Units from the Department of Public Safety, Sheriff's Office, Military Police, and the police department arrive.

Under prevailing federal, state, and local laws explain who has jurisdiction for the investigation.

- A body is found floating in the Rio Grande River. It is near a small unused bridge connecting Texas to Mexico. A member of the Border Patrol pulled the body from the water. The body now lies along the cement levee on the U.S. side. At this location, the river is considered an international boundary.
